

The number of police on duty generally during Sunday's game between Birmingham and Aston Villa. To clarify, by that I would mean the number of police on duty to deal with match attendees outside of the stadium

No information held - The provision of "consequential policing" outside a football match, for example at a railway station or in the city centre, is currently the responsibility of the police. This includes any costs of such policing. These costs however, except for subsistence, are not separately recorded and are therefore not identified. Policing hours are not, in the main, separately collated and are therefore not separately identifiable.

The number of police on duty within St. Andrews' Stadium during Sunday's game between Birmingham and Aston Villa

The total number of officers was 129, this will include other non-uniformed officers such as Evidence Gathering Teams.

The amount owed by Birmingham City to the force for special policing services from August 2018 on the date of receipt.

£134,568.42

Football clubs are currently only legally obliged to pay for the policing on their "footprint", usually inside the stadium and surrounding car parks. The provision of "consequential policing" outside a football match, for example at a railway station or in the city centre, is currently the responsibility of the police. This includes any costs of such policing. These costs, except for subsistence, are not separately recorded and are therefore not identified. Policing hours are not, in the main, separately collated and are therefore not separately identifiable"