

According to guidance published by the Home Office (see below signature, page 2 for information) in the process of recording a crime, police can flag an offence as being motivated by one or more of five categories. These are:

- race or ethnicity;
- religion or beliefs;
- sexual orientation;
- disability;

In your response, for each crime recorded, please could you state the specific crime recorded, for example racially or religiously aggravated assault, and which of these five categories listed above were involved.
